

Sarah Sellers

Thursday 10th March 2022

My Dearest Jane,

One must implore how wonderfully sublime it was to accept your invitation to your most private, humble abode today. To behold the delight of your work foundation is nourishing to the soul, one has gained such knowledge through your admiration for nature it is fulfilling, your simplistic yet satisfying view of nature and life entwined, draw in reflection, unless one is unfettered by reflection of course.

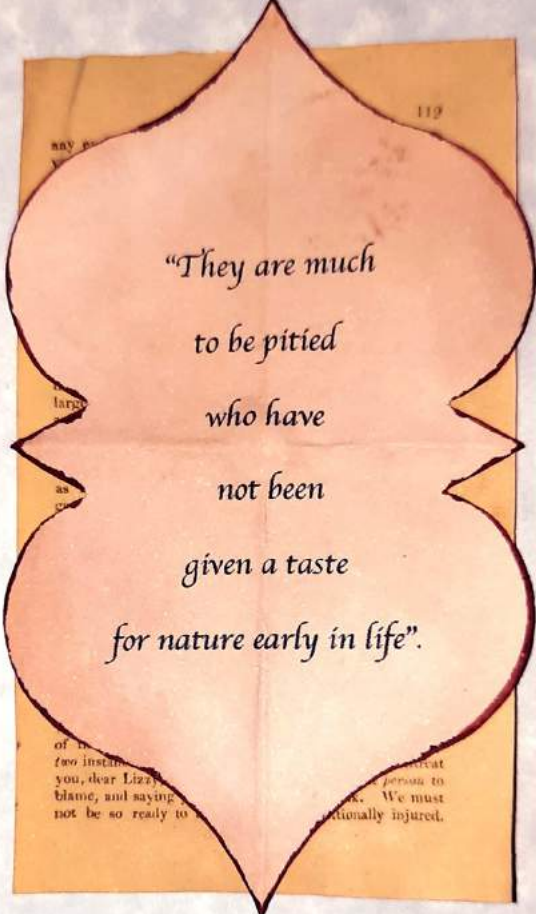

In this reflection dear Jane, one can resonate your infamous quotes, To then intertwine that passion into one's own philosophy of work. The beauty & grandeur of nature is only refreshment when it has been brought into experience early in life, how contrived one's life must be without the insight to the verdure available to me.

One must be implicitly compounded to share with you how compelling some of your writings have been invigorating to one's own thought regarding the purity of nature that surrounds us yet still alludes the many. I would like to bring to your attention to the writing that brought about most my attention and hope you appreciate one's appropriation of your words. It disappoints me when you claim such dissatisfaction with the inconsistencies of human character, are we all not learners of this world, are you not teaching your readers to appreciate the wonder of nature & life so? What is one's rock is another's mountain, without your insight and scriptures dear Jane others would not have learnt of such a life outside of the life they are consumed to live?

I have found your quotes regarding nature enlightening. There may be future generations that may learn from your sensibility dear Jane.

with Gratitude your

Friend, Sarah

119

any p larg
as of the two insc
you, dear Lizzy
blame, and saying
not be so ready to

person to
We must
tionally injured.

*"They are much
to be pitied
who have not been given a taste
for nature early in life".*